MISCELLANEOUS READING. COMMUNICATED.

TO S .- BY LARRY LEE. I see thee not, yet how can I forget thee, Or chide the feelings nursed within my breast Nor in the sad and lonely hours regret me, Of gentler actions girt by friendship's test,

Which ripened in the morning of our glory, And held its sway e'en in those darker hours, When dullest seem'd the thread of life's brief story And dimmest all her beauties and her powers. And brightly shone the glimmering star of heaven Which smiled upon the pathway of our year-, As brightly as the crimson fringe of even,

Which skirts the soft and rosy west, appears (Upon the distant wide and spreading mountains, Which range along the border of the sky.) Mingling anon its beams within the fountains, Which ripple with their noisy voices by.

Which baulk the spirit in its bright career, Which chill our sunlight with their ling'ring last ings, And mar our bosoms from their wonted cheer: Alas they would not check their sorrows, endless Nor cease their bitter ravings ev'n now,

We knew not then the bleak and piercing blastings, we were left forsaken, lone and friendles But hope has twined a wreath around her brow Which in its spotless garniture of beauty, Nor not alone from merest sense of duty, Nor for compassion's sake, which dims thy eye,

Doth her bright radiance glimmer through the wrappings
Which open to the chambers of our joy:
'Tis friendship basking 'neath her gorgeons trap pings, Nor time nor grief nor pain can e'er alloy. Yet cometimes doth there come a blight upon us. Which bodes no time nor feels our future woe, Nor heeds the beauteous scenes that lay around us Nor fears the tempest nor the torrent's flow; But comes awhile within our walls to linger, To shade our thoughts amid its gathering gloom. To warm our hearts with dark and cold December.

Pointing its hollow finger to the tomb!

CHURCH LOUNGERS. A very ready and spicy contributor to the olumns of the Richmond Examiner, who writes under the heading of "Richmond Dottings," and over the signature of "Town Talk," after promising to devote a portion of his space in future to the Richmond pulpit, administers the following well deserved rebuke to those who lounge about church doors:

"There is another outside congregation to whom I shall pay my especial attention - I allude to that class generally assembled around the church door. Young gentlemen may think there is some glory in a defiance of public opinion, but let an old man like myself, tell you that respect for religion, and even for the walls where its doctrines are taught, will benefit you; but so sure as you deny the respect due so holy an institution, just as surely will society repudiate you.-Young America can discard my warnings if they choose, but I tell them there is an in delible stain upon the once fair reputation of the gentleman, when he makes the sanctuary of God his lounging place! He may think is doing God service by his external show of piety! Not so, my young friends, as will be proved by an extract from Defoe's "True born Englishman:

"Wherever God erects a house of prayer, The Devil always builds a chapel there, And 'twill be found upon examination. The latter has the largest congregation.
